Importance Of Chinese Tones:

Tones are particularly important in Chinese because they are key to speak Chinese properly. Yet they are so very easy for us to overlook at first because we come from non-tonal languages. The Chinese languages is composed of characters. There are a limited number of sounds called pinyin used to pronounce. These character. In fact, there are a lot of more character than there are sounds. So one by thing to know about Chinese is that many words have similar pronunciation similar to the point of ever often begin the same.

In that case, the only thing that allows you to tell two words apart when you hear them pronounced in writing you simply have to look at the two different character to tell apart is the tone with which they are pronounced.

And it's usually considered one of the biggest challenges in learning Chinese. It does work to get them right. Good news is you'll get there. It's always don't be afraid to make mistakes. There is only way you'll learn. Practice listening to spoken Chinese and get accustomed to how tone sounds. That

Away Chinese and get your Tones ~~are~~ wrong. It's okay.
Eventually like we said old,
all you are not going to end up in sitting people inententially.
